7. METODOLOGÍA DOCENTE

Our classes will have both a theoretical and practical approach, although the practical one is going to really be the focus of our attention.

Sessions will be as active as possible, and the students will be asked to do many different types of tasks depending on the contents, skills or communicative functions required. According to this, the tasks will be done either in groups, pairs or just individually (a special interest will be taken in both Oral Expression and Listening Comprehension, the two linguistic skills which are usually neglected).

The evaluation is a way of obtaining precise information about the process of learning, which is useful for both the teacher and the student. As to this, the evaluation will be a formative, continuous and global process by means of which the teacher will measure the progress in the communicative competence of the student, that is to say, the progress in the oral and written expression and comprehension of the English language, valuing the student's work, his/her participation in the class as well as his/her attitude. Also class attendance will be compulsory (a maximum of 20% of non-attendance has been stipulated so that the student can keep his/her schooling rights as to this subject).

Finally, at the end of the course, the students will have to demonstrate their aptitude for the subject by sitting for:

- a) a written examination
- b) an oral examination.
